

It's very clear to me that Scotland could be an independent economy. There's no doubt. . . this is a substantial economy that could survive on its own without any real problems. It could survive on its own, it could even thrive on its own.

David McWilliams, leading Irish economist

So I voted No in 2014. I believed we were a union of equals. I kinda feel a wee bit daft that I was taken for a complete fool. I have since come to my senses. This is no union of equals.
